The peanut bas, as we have stated on a previous occasion, taspired more oratory than anything else grown in this country. It is indissolubly associated with State and national legislation. It Tax oiled the tongues of American statesmen for generations. It is true that our peanut grows principally in the knows no North, no South, no East, no West, Besides, if any carping critic should bring up the flursy pretext of its sectional raising, that could be offset by the all-potent fact that the vine is also indigeneous to Africa. The "man and the brother" would therefore not be discriminated against in the selection which would be entirely in harmony with the spirit of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth smeadments to the Constitution as these amendments are construed by some of our able Republican friends who seem never to have read them. When we are told, as we sometimes are, that the creditors of Virginia are willing to take as interest upon the bonds they hold whatever money is left in the State Treasury after paying the expenses of keeping up the State government, we reply that no settlement can be made upon such a basis. The Legislature would be tempted to increase the expenses of every department rather the expenses of every department rather than to allow too much money to pass into the hands of the bondholders. There could be no way of preventing such a result, for no legislator would dare to propose that the bondholders should themselves fix the smount to be expended for governmental purposes—including schools, asytums, coltributed $100 to aid the Johnstown sufferers. lages, couris, juils, &c., &c., &c. Filibustering is objectionable. Mr. Weaven fatigued us last winter with his obstructive tactics. But there are other things much worse than filibustering. It is a question of life and death with the southern people, for if the rules be altered so as to enable the House of Representatives to pass a bill giving the control of all southern congressional elections to Republican partisans the South will sink to rise no more in the political ocean. She would be humiliated as even Ireland has never been humiliated. The Providence Journal warns Mr. Randall, that he must not lead the filibusters, but he will lead them notwithstanding.
